Episcopalians To Hear Alaskan At Convocation

Daily life 170 miles above the Arctic Circle will be described by an Alaskan Missionary and his wife at the annual fall meeting of the Long Beach Convocation of the Episcopal Church to be held Nov. 11 at St. Andrew's Church, 1432 Encarnacion Ave.

The Rev. Rowland J. Cox, priest-in-charge of St. Thomas Church, Point Hope, Alaska, and his wife, Mary, will tell of their experiences in the Alaskan mission fields.

Rev. Cox will relate personal experiences in the Alaskan mission fields. Stationed at the northernmost mission of the Episcopal Church, they minister to Eskimos whose way of life is still largely based on a hunting economy.

The modern missionaries keep in touch with the outside world through radio and mail plane, and do much of their traveling by dog sled, pulled by their 40 dogs.

The Coxes, who were educated and have lived most of their lives in urban centers in the eastern United States went to Alaska three years ago. They will soon return to Fr. Cox's post after a brief furlough in the United States.
